Dear Parishioners,

Belonging to a parish and diocese really isn't optional in the Catholic Church. Not belonging is, well, not beneficial. Catholicism tries to balance the individual with the community. Communal public worship has its time and place, such as every Sunday or

Saturday evening at Mass; quiet solitude, such as private meditation, mental prayer, silent retreats, holy hours, and such, also have their time and place.

Catholics don't have a choice when it comes to worshipping both communally and personally. Catholics believe that human beings need both dimensions.

When Catholics are registered in a parish, they get more than weekly envelopes to drop in a basket. They also get a spiritual family that wants to pray with and for them. When Catholics are asked to be a godmother or godfather for Baptism or a sponsor for Confirmation, only registered Catholics can get verification from the parish priest that they're Catholics in good standing.

Not everyone agrees with what the Catholic Church teaches or likes how she prays or approves of all her policies, but like all well-established and ancient religions, she's here to stay.
